- 61 Br. 396a. Courteau 361. Obv. Crude view of a building, above HALF PENNY. rev. J B in script. This token always crudely struck. Note: This token, while having been as- 45.00
serted by some to be from Nottingham, England, has been recognized by Canadian collectors as having been issued by John Brown of Halifax (see Br. 396) who conducted a West Indian trade in that city. The building depicted on the obverse was long thought to have been that of W.&A.S. Black (see Br. 392-3) but through the research of Earl Hadden and "An Occasional" published in The Numismatist, Oct. 1913, it was identified to be the Marchinton building from which place Brown carried on a retail dry store. It was for this business that the token was said to have been made. As some of these tokens were found in Nova Scotia, it seems fairly certain that they have been correctly attributed, and as such should be considered one of the earliest locally produced token coinages.

Note: For reference to these tokens, see C.K.A. Journal article by Fred Bowman. (Feb. 1965) While obverses are struck, three different dies having been employed, the reverses were made from various tokens which impressions were sunk into the metal to form an intaglio.

NOTE: The following group are being listed under the heading Br. 609 although Leroux catalogued varieties subtitled numbers 1517c & d respectively. This is because of the common (or at least similar in the case of 1517c) obv. or rev. design employed. Breton claimed that 2,000 of the regular aluminum variety were struck, and McColl

(1903) advertised it in copper as "rare" and further stating that only five specimens were struck in that metal. It can't be attested whether or not that figure is accurate, or similarly accounts for the other off-metals, mules & "patterns", only that they are scarce or even rare and have seldom been offered for sale. In case of interest in the lot, it is offered as a unit at 300.00

94	Br. 1012. The rare Courteau 20, which he claimed served as the prototype for all other varieties. Equally, it could have been, like the "Blacksmiths", a later copy, with the obverse and reverse facing the opposite direction to their prototypes. This seems to me more reasonable, as their rarity would suggest that they were not circulated long enough nor so extensively to have been the subject of reproduction. The reverse harp does not face the right direction, as described by Courteau. The right side and strings are inverted, which deception gives the appearance of the harp facing right. The letters URU can be weakly seen at upper left side of obverse. copper. small thick flan. 26mm. very rare.	300.00
