Illustrated on cover:

Silver medal, 41 mm., presented to Jos. Poitras, April 24, 1833, for "meritorious services" in saving the Bonsecours Street Church (Canada's oldest church) from destruction.

Montreal was originally divided into five wards for establishing fire companies. The St. Lawrence Fire Company may have been one of several private companies in operation at the time<sup>1</sup>. In the 1848 McKay Directory ten Fire Engines and Stations are listed.

At a quarter past eight, on April 25th, 1833, the alarm in the British American Hotel roused the numerous inmates from their respective quarters. Within forty minutes, the hotel was burnt to the ground. The report in the Montreal Gazette continues, "Every eye was now turned to the Bonsecours Church, the steeple and spire of which had already caught the flames, and which, it was generally thought, would spread downwards to the building, but owing to the practice of the engines on the roof and to the most heroic devotion on the part of Mr. Joseph Poitras, carpenter, assisted by a soldier whose name we have not learned, the church was saved. Poitras and his companion cut a hole in the steeple with an axe, surrounded by the smoke and flames of the burning spire, as well as that ascending from Rasco's Hotel, and after exhibiting the most daring courage and insensibility to personal danger, Poitras effectually succeeded in cutting off the communication of the church with the fire, by throwing down the burning ball and cross, which he affected with an axe and saw."

See also inside back cover for picture of the church.
